There now have been several weeks to analyze the Russian smile and the so-called "Spirit of Geneva." Looking at the facts, which are more important than the words, there is little evidence of a change in Soviet policy.

Without doubt there has been a change in Kremlin strategy, but this does not necessarily indicate a genuine attempt to relieve world tension.

One of the major contributions toward peace requested by President Eisenhower was an end of subversion.

Allen Dulles, director of the Central Intelligence Agency, said there is no evidence that Russian underground activities have ceased. He estimated that the Reds devote 10 per cent of their armament expenditures to the program of subversion.

J. Edgar Hoover has told the International Association of Chiefs of Police that Communist lawyers in this country are participating in a campaign of vituperation that "is part and parcel of Communist strategy to convert the courtroom into a forum to discredit the judicial processes."

There has been no letup in Communist efforts at subversion in the United States and elsewhere. The need for constant vigil is as great today as a year ago—or as at any time in history, for that matter.
